

Recommendation letter for W. Barents

Date: 5th of February 2026

To Whom It May Concern:

I had the pleasure of working with William Barents as his Development Manager from May 2023 onward. Over that time, he grew into a confident senior full-stack engineer with strong system-level thinking, excellent technical judgment, and a deep commitment to quality. William possesses a sharp, analytical mind, genuinely strong algorithmic intuition, and a deep love for the craft. He learns fast, but more importantly, he learns correctly - he doesn't just copy patterns, he internalizes why they work, asks the right questions, and then applies that understanding with growing independence.

From a frontend background in React, he picked up Angular - our primary stack at the time - rapidly and without problems, and never stopped learning after that. Over the course of our time working together, he consistently showed ownership, reliability, and good judgment.

One of William's most meaningful contributions was his work on a financial dashboard where he owned both the frontend and backend end-to-end. This was not a "pretty UI" project - it was an operationally sensitive system used to securely manage API keys, back up and export trade data, and provide analytics for day-to-day decision-making. He implemented proper secret handling via Secret Manager (storing only metadata in Firestore) and integrated multiple exchange APIs (including ones without clean, official support). He also configured an IP-NAT VPC to enable IP-restricted API calls. Taken together, it was a mature, security-aware implementation, which meaningfully improved both safety and operational velocity.

Beyond that, he delivered steady contributions across multiple parallel initiatives: a web3 news aggregation website (newsfeed and UI work), multiple webapps for our subsidiaries (frontend iterations and redesigns), and an internal backend tooling system intended as a central management system for structuring portfolio content across products. Across all of these, the pattern was consistent; William ships, he follows through, and he makes things better than he found them.

On the human side, William is genuinely kind-hearted and easy to work with. He's proactive in offering help, he communicates openly, and he brings a positive energy that makes remote work feel more collaborative and personal. He lightened up standups and calls, always had something constructive - or simply kind - to say to colleagues, and he's the type of teammate who will put in extra hours when it matters, without making it anyone else's problem. That combination of competence and character is rare, and it matters.

I'm confident William will be an excellent addition to any team that values ownership, steady execution, and someone who is eager to tackle hard problems and grow into a bigger role. I most sincerely recommend him, and I'd be happy to speak directly if you'd like more context or specific examples of his work.

Sincerely,
